Details of the courses I taught are described in the CV above. Most of my teaching has focused on the history of european colonisation, primarily in north america), the history of the environment and history of energy use and consumption (oil in particular). I have also contributed to a course syllabus published in 2010:

J.F. Mouhot, 'The Acceleration of the 'Anthropocene': 'Oil''. In Past Actions: Present Woes, Future Potential': Rethinking History in the Light of Anthropogenic Climate Change. A Model University Syllabus for History and Related Subjects (HEA), ed. M. Levene. Higher Education Academy (2010)

XVI. International experience

During my undergraduate studies in history (at my home university in France, the Université de Franche-Comté), I spent one year with a European (Erasmus) grant at the University of Birmingham (United Kingdom) (1997-98). I have then studied for my Master's degree at the Université du Québec in Montreal, Canada (CREPUQ exchange) (1998-99), and spent one more year at the National University of Ireland, Galway, thanks to the Eurodyssy exchange program (1999-2000), before starting a PhD at the European University Institute in Florence, Italy (2000-2003). Towards the end of the writing stage of my PhD I was recruited as a junior lecturer (Attaché d'enseignement et de recherche, ATER). Shortly after the defense of my PhD I was recruited at the University of Birmingham where I worked first as a project archivist for a year, and then as a post-doctoral researcher for three years (with a one year interruption to work for an environmental NGO in London) (2006-2011). Since June 2011 I live in Washington D.C. and I am Marie Curie Fellow at Georgetown University.
